

So I can't do that thing anymore. I can't be the thing I was before.

Yes, baking with your hands is more fun. And the results have a better texture, and taste better.

Or an old lady's parlor full of dried flowers.

Now if we could just find what we came here for, we could go eat barbecue.

Just so you're aware? Not even Memphis living up to its mythological associations can quell my appetite for barbecue.

Not even the mention of barbecue can make me envious of you two right now.

Memphis barbecue?

Is this the wrong time to tell you about the guy I knew in Berlin who mummified his own toes, earlobes, nipples, and penis for sexual reasons? He used a dessicator.

Kept them in a trophy case in the living room.

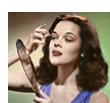

Some people make you feel much better about yourself, you know?

I look at this comment, and all can think about is that somewhere back on the east coast there's a warm bed with a girl in it who smells good, and what have I got? Mummies, a wise-ass ex-reporter, and a cowboy with allergies, that's what.

Life sucks.

And then you have pie.

Ooo. Pie.

Come on, let's get room service.

Is it wrong that the first thing my brain thought of is "I wonder if he removed them first"?

Upon further neuron firings I realised that mummifying attached body parts would be fairly quickly lethal, but the mental image of a guy with a mummified penis still attached ...

... well, they look weird anyway so perhaps one wouldn't notice?

Memphis, Texas, Kansas City... BBQ = <3.

But still insufficient to make up for all the fun.

Even without context, that sounds like you're having a really grim time. Sorry to hear it, and I hope it gets better soon. In an entirely positive, bringing everybody home in once piece way, that is.

I really never understood the appeal of stuffed animals. Or dried flowers, come to that. Dead things as ornaments, whether flora or fauna, are just ick, as well as collecting entirely too much dust.

Grim is a good word.

Yeah, dead things. Not so great around the house.

I'd offer a virtual hug, but hugging strange men you meet on the internet is one of those things my mother would have warned me against if it had ever occurred to her that it could happen.

Besides, I wouldn't want to get you in trouble. So I shall just wish for real warm snuggly hugs for you when you get back, instead, which you will entirely deserve.
